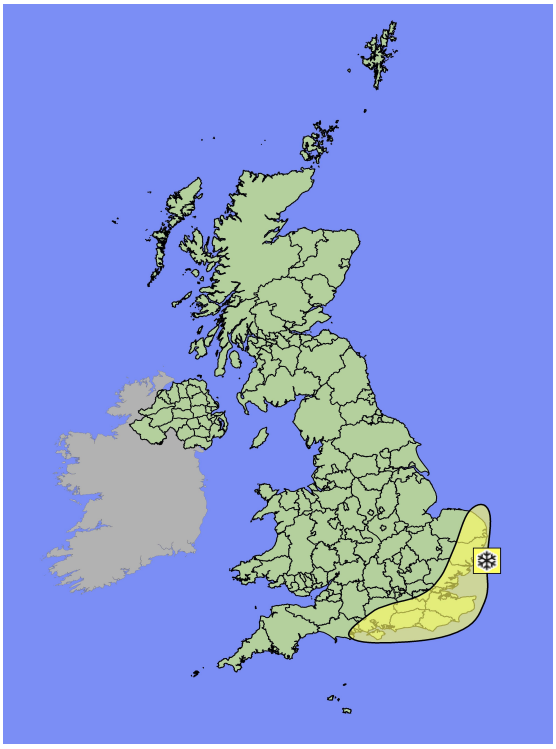
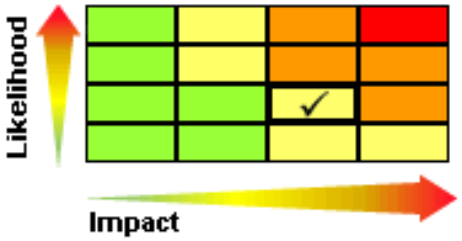
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A very cold and unstable northeasterly flow will continue to produce snow showers across the region. Meanwhile, the northern flank of a depression across northern France brings potential for more prolonged spells of snow affecting southern counties. There remains uncertainty about how far north this more persistent snow will spread tonight, but the south of Sussex and Kent are at greatest risk.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 11:45 on Mon, 11th Mar 2013 until 09:00 on Tue, 12th Mar 2013

Further snow showers, and, in the south of the highlighted area, some longer spells of snow, are expected through the rest of today and overnight. Snow will be accompanied by a strong northeasterly wind which will accentuate the very cold feel and cause lying snow to drift. For the most part only small amounts of snow are likely to settle on roads during the daytime, but from around dusk accumulations of 2-5 cm of snow could occur in places, with a low risk of 5-10 cm for southern parts of Sussex and Kent overnight.

The public are advised to be aware of the risk of disruption to travel.
